

Active Disposition, Call Count 2

Subject: [Name], Picture This:

You step into the kitchen, and you hear it again—only louder this time. It almost sounds like a garbage disposal, but no...it's your stomach rumbling.

You open the fridge, hoping for a slice of pizza or some leftover Chinese food. Unfortunately, you don't get paid till Friday so pickings are slim. The ketchup's expired and the pickle jar is nothing but juice.

Then you hear your phone ring from the counter.

You check your phone, but you don't recognize the caller's number. Usually you don't answer these calls, but today, for some reason, something feels different. Maybe it's the grumble in your stomach, or maybe you're just looking for something exciting after another boring day at work.

You answer the call and go back to the fridge.

"Hello?" you say, checking the date on a carton of milk. "Hello?"

"Hi, is this [Name]?" comes a chipper, professional-sounding voice from the other end.

You put down the milk carton and clear your throat. "Yes, this is [Name], who's this?"

"Hi [Name], I'm Anna, I'm a Senior Hiring Manager. One of my recruiters forwarded me your resume and I'm really impressed with your background and especially your education. You applied to one of our job postings online. Unfortunately, that job has been filled...but we actually think you'd be a great fit for an even higher-paying position in the company."

"Awesome," you say. You feel a smile creep across your face. "That's great. Tell me more about this position!" You start to close the fridge, but wouldn't you know it—there's your leftover pizza from last night. It was hiding behind the milk.

There's nothing like a pleasant surprise to brighten your day.

The scene described above is pretty rare for most of us, and that's a shame. Because getting a great new job can change your life. Imagine the satisfaction of succeeding in a challenging career, the respect of your friends and coworkers, and the financial freedom to give your family the life they deserve.

The trouble is, hiring managers get dozens or even hundreds of resumes for the best jobs. So how can you stand out from the crowd?

Education.

We're Degree Connection, one of America's most trusted and unbiased educational matching service providers. We provide a unique risk-free service: we match you to your ideal degree or certification program, saving you the time and hassle of visiting campuses and researching schools online.

The service is free of charge, takes 4-6 minutes over the phone, and comes with no obligation to enroll. (That's what you call risk-free.)

One of our Educational Representatives has tried to call you at [ProspectPhone], but hasn't been able to reach you. We've authorized them to try calling you one more time, but because our service is in high demand (we help thousands of people find schools every week), they'll have to move on to the next person if you don't answer the call.

Of course, if you don't want to risk missing out, you can call us instead toll-free at 1-866-347-1464. Even if you're not sure whether you want to go back to school or not, we advise you to give us a call and take advantage of your free opportunity while you still can.

To your future,

The folks at Degree Connection
